DRC OFFICIALLY JOINS EAC.

The Democratic Republic of Congo has joined the East African Community (EAC) as its seventh member, massively expanding the territory of the trade bloc, paving its way for access to the Atlantic Ocean and growing its economic significance.

The DRC's membership is a result of former British colonies Kenya and Uganda in 1967. Rwanda and Burundi joined the bloc in 2007 while South Sudan became the latest member in 2016.

The DRC is the largest and most populous country to join the EAC, bringing a market of 90 million people and immediately upgrading the region's economic clout, analysts say.

Despite being admitted to join EAC, security challenges remain in the country.

The move may also help bring more stability to the DRC, which has been plagued by conflict for decades. On March 29, violence erupted in the eastern city of Goma after a rebel group declared that the DRC army near the border with Uganda and Rwanda, Reuters report.
